Salamonie Lake to host Weed Wrangle Saturday, Sept. 24

In conjunction with National Public Lands Day, promoting volunteerism and environmental stewardship, the public is invited to participate in the Upper Wabash Invasives Network (UWIN) Weed Wrangle. The event is set to last from 10 a.m. to noon at Salamonie Lake's Interpretive and Nature Center, 3691 New Holland Road, Andrews. During the Weed Wrangle workshop, we will help identify invasive plants and teach important techniques for the removal of select species. Volunteers should wear long-sleeved shirts and closed-toe shoes. Volunteers should bring work gloves, wide-brimmed hats, sunscreen, bug spray and a refillable water bottle. If you have tools, feel free to bring them. No chainsaws. The first 50 volunteers to sign up for advance registration and attend and work at the session will receive a UWIN T-shirt. To register, call 260-468-2127.

Salamonie Lake's Riders Reunion runs through Sept. 25

Get ready to saddle up through Sunday, Sept. 25 at Lost Bridge West Horseman's Campground, 9214 W. Lost Bridge West Road, Andrews. Bring your horses and a silent auction item to help the fundraiser, Power the Camp. While bringing a horse is not mandatory to attend the event, horse enthusiasts are invited to bring their horses to camp the weekend or enjoy a day ride. There are no horse rentals at Salamonie Lake. Property entrance fees apply of $7 per in-state vehicle and $9 per out-of-state vehicle. For trail riders, a horse tag is required and available for purchase at the entrance gate for a cost of $5 daily or $20 annual. Camp reservations may be visiting www.camp.in.gov, <https://indianastateparks.reserveamerica.com/>, <https://on.IN.gov/salamonielake> or dnr.IN.gov.

WACT's fall musical, 'Guys and Dolls,' to be performed through Sept. 25

County Council approves WCSD's additional gasoline, prisoner food funds

Sheriff receives requested $49,400 appropriation for fuel; $24,000 for jail meals

By ROB BURGESS

Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

At Monday's Wabash County Council meeting, Sheriff Ryan Baker asked for and received additional appropriations for gasoline and food for prisoners.

Baker had requested an additional $49,400 for fuel, and $24,000 for the increased cost of meals in the Wabash County Jail.

Before taking the final vote, District 2 council member Barbara Pearson asked Baker about parameters for officers to take their work vehicles home.

Baker said this policy was critical because his officers "need to respond to calls" at all hours of the day.

Baker said officers are issued a gas card, and they must enter their PIN and record their mileage.

Pearson said she wanted to know if there could be some limits placed on the off-duty use of these vehicles.

"Would it be something you would consider talking to your deputies? Is there a way you can for a year or so? Or, maybe not be that long," said Pearson.

Baker said he didn't think any of his officers were misusing the privilege of their take-home vehicles.

"I can send an email about, 'Watch your gas mileage,'" said Baker. "I don't want to overly restrict their use.

That's part of the take-home car policy. I don't think our guys are driving excessively. I think it's just the cost of gas right now."

Baker said there is currently no cap on these miles driven.

"It's nothing we've ever regulated because it's not been an issue," said Baker.

Pearson said she "didn't want to constrict their use."

But, Baker said, "that's what it would do."

"We could have a lot less deputies if we knew where a crime was going to occur or a wreck. I'm not being smart. You just never know. It happens regularly. We respond to thousands of calls per year. I would not like to entertain that," said Baker.

Chairman Kyle Bowman said he also supported sending an email reminder "just to make sure there's no abuses going on."

Baker said like gasoline, the cost of food had risen along with the prices of everything else.

The appropriations were then approved by council members unanimously, 6-0.

Honoring local businesses was the main focus of Wabash's Founders Festival parade held Saturday, Sept. 17. Here the legend of Modoc lives on as the name of Angie and Michael Beachamp's coffee shop located at the corner of Market and Miami streets in downtown Wabash.

The parade featured 62 entries on Saturday, Sept. 17.

Local royalty was part of the parade.

Founders Festival parade a success

Over five dozen entries participated in the annual tradition last weekend

By ROB BURGESS

Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

Last weekend, downtown Wabash was filled with familiar sights and sounds of the annual Founders Festival, including the parade.

Mayor's assistant Bev Vanderpool said the parade featured 62 entries on Saturday, Sept. 17.

"One was Culver Military Academy Color Guard who had to cancel at last minute due to a sick horse," said Vanderpool. "However, (the) last-minute substitute was the North Manchester Boy Scouts."

Vanderpool said when it was all said and done the winners were:

■ Best of Parade: Indiana State Festivals Truck

■ Best Organizational Float: LaFontaine Learning Community

■ Best Commercial Float: Vernon Manor

■ Mayor's Choice: Parkview Hospital

■ Queens Choice: Bachelor Creek Church

■ Judges Choice: Saint Bernard School

■ Antique Vehicle: Noble 9 Township Fire Department

The full list of entries included:

■ Indiana State Police Peru Post Officer David

Kewish

■ City of Wabash Fire Department

■ Wabash County Sheriff Ryan Baker

■ City of Wabash Police

■ Noble Township Fire Department

■ Urbana Fire Department

■ Wabash County Museum Fire Truck

■ Mayor Scott Long

■ Clerk-Treasurer Wendy Frazier

Manchester to launch UN Sustainable Development Goals series

By ANNE GREGORY

Manchester University will host Professor Sakiko Fukuda-Parr for "Power and Knowledge in UN Development Agendas: The Sustainable Development Goals" at 11 a.m. Monday, Sept. 26 in Cordier Auditorium.

The program on the North Manchester campus is free and open to the public.

An internationally recognized scholar and expert in international affairs, Fukuda-Parr's recent research focuses on the politics of the UN's Sustainable Development Goals: 17 goals from the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development adopted by all UN member states in 2015, which call all countries to action to bring peace and prosperity to people and the planet.

Fukuda-Parr is a professor of international affairs at The New School for Social Research in New York. From 1995 to 2004, she led the UN's Development Programme Human Development Reports.

Her presentation is the first in a series at Manchester focusing on sustainable development goals.

Established in 1948, the Peace Studies Institute at Manchester was the first undergraduate peace studies program in the world. Andrew Cordier, who graduated from Manchester in 1922, was a key player in drafting the UN founding charter.

Anne Gregory is the communications and media relations director for Manchester University.

New film highlights Indiana baseball legend

Special Olympics Indiana hosting a screening of ‘The Best We’ve Got: The Carl Erskine Story’

Staff REPORT

Carl Erskine, the man who is living a perfect game, will be brought to the big screen in Wabash, with the showing of “The Best We’ve Got: The Carl Erskine Story” on Monday, Sept. 26 at the Eagles Theatre, 106 W. Market St., according to Community Foundation of Wabash County (CFWC) director of operations Sam McFadden.

Tickets are $6 and are on sale now by visiting <https://www.honeywellarts.org/carl-erskine>.

“With Erskine being such a pivotal figure in Special Olympics Indiana’s history, the organization has partnered with Ted Green Films to spread Erskine’s messages of friendship, inclusion, servant leadership and respect,” said McFadden.

McFadden said, “The Best We’ve Got: The Carl Erskine Story” premiered on the big screen Aug. 11 at the Paramount Theatre in Erskine’s hometown of Anderson.

“The film, produced by renowned filmmaker Ted Green, takes a deep dive into Erskine’s upbringing as a child and his legendary career in Major League Baseball with Jackie Robinson, the first African American to break the color barrier in a sport that was segregated for more than 50 years. The film will take viewers on Erskine’s most proud adventure when he and his wife, Betty, have their son Jimmy, who was born with Down syndrome and will share their story and the impact they’ve made on Special Olympics Indiana and social change across the country,” said McFadden. “Erskine has been referred to as many things. In the classic baseball novel, ‘The Boys of Summer,’ Erskine was referred to as a philosopher, a poet and an ‘existential man.’ A New York sports-writer called him, ‘the gentleman from Indiana.’ Dennis Schmidt, former CEO of Special Olympics Indiana, said Erskine is the most decent man he’s ever met. Former Indiana Governor Mitch Daniels, in giving Erskine the state’s highest honor, said simply, ‘He’s the best we’ve got.’”

McFadden said, “in today’s world where animosity, ignorance, prejudice, and conflict are highlighted across social media and news outlets, Erskine’s story of acceptance and dignity is ready to be shared when the world needs it most.”

“Being at the forefront of arguably two of the most important social movements the world has ever seen, Erskine’s impact on the nation is second to none,” said McFadden. “Green has dedicated many laborious hours over the years to inform the world about the life of one of the best humanity has to offer. This masterpiece will include powerful and inspirational interviews from some of the most respected figures around. Charley Steiner, multiple national Emmy winner at ESPN and the lead radio voice of the Los Angeles Dodgers, narrates the documentary. The late Vin Scully, who spent 67 seasons calling games for the Dodgers, will be featured in the film. Other notable figures are Bob Costas, Governor Mitch Daniels, and Dr. Tim Shriver, son of Special Olympics founder Eunice Kennedy Shriver and current chairperson of the Special Olympics International Board of Directors.”

McFadden said the Wabash screening of the documentary is a partnership with the CFWC, Honeywell Arts & Entertainment, Manchester University and Special Olympics Wabash County “with an expected sold-out crowd.”

“This collaborative effort supports action items from the Imagine One 85 comprehensive plan such as creating kindness initiative and continuing to support the County’s commitment to a diverse, equitable, and inclusive community for all,” said McFadden. “In addition to this film, Special Olympics Indiana is proud to partner with Green in developing the Erskine Personal Impact Curriculum (EPIC). EPIC is a set of educational materials for elementary, middle, and high school students that has been released in conjunction with the film. More than 70,000 books have been ordered and shipped to 300 schools across the state of Indiana. The curriculum promotes social and emotional learning for every age level, using stories and experiences from Erskine’s life to create lessons and activities with themes including empowerment, friendship, inclusion, and servant leadership.”

How to limit Putin and Xi's 'no limits' friendship

Meeting Vladimir Putin in Uzbekistan on Thursday, Chinese President Xi Jinping declared that his nation was “willing to work with Russia, display the responsibilities of the major powers, and play a leading role to inject stability and positive energy to a world in chaos.” As Putin’s military failures in Ukraine mount, the U.S. and its allies should remind Xi of how costly that partnership could become.

Since Russia launched its invasion in February, China has consistently refused to criticize Putin or pressure him to negotiate an end to the war. Chinese officials and state-run media have amplified Russian misinformation, blaming Western sanctions for causing widespread hardship across the developing world. Chinese exporters have filled the gap left by the pullout of Western companies from Russia, while China has bought huge quantities of Russian oil and gas on the cheap. Despite Russia’s isolation, the two countries’ bilateral trade expanded by more than 30 percent in the first eight months of this year.

The two authoritarian powers do have common interests. They share a deep sense of historical grievance and a desire to weaken U.S. influence and alliances around the world; in his meeting with Xi, Putin blasted attempts to create a unipolar world as “ugly” and “completely unacceptable.” For China, Russia is a reliable source of energy supplies, commodities and sophisticated weaponry. China has also benefited from the outbreak of war in Europe, which has diverted at least some U.S. attention and resources away from the Indo-Pacific.

At the same time, China is mindful of the risks of going too far. Trade with the U.S. and European Union dwarfs that with Russia. While Chinese state media reported that Xi pledged to cooperate with Putin “in such areas as trade, agriculture and connectivity,” the U.S. says it has seen no systematic attempt by China to contravene Western sanctions or high-tech export controls on Russia. Putin has thus far relied on Iran and North Korea to supply weapons of dubious quality. But faced with the prospect of further battlefield setbacks – and even defeat – in Ukraine, Putin will likely continue to seek more overt assistance from China.

The West should ensure Xi understands the price of allying too closely with Putin. At a minimum, the U.S. should seek to freeze Chinese support for Russia at current levels. Warnings from U.S. President Joe Biden not to challenge Western sanctions appear to have worked so far. If the U.S. and Chinese leaders meet as expected at the G-20 summit in November, Biden should reiterate those red lines and stress that growing Chinese investments in Russia could spur new U.S. penalties. European leaders should reinforce the message, reminding Xi of how much ground China has already lost by backing Putin. Battered by a property slump and dampened consumer sentiment, China’s economy can ill afford further disruption.

The U.S. should also strengthen ties with regional actors threatened by a possible Sino-Russian alliance. The U.S. should increase defense coordination with its closest regional ally, Japan, and pursue deeper partnership with India, which views Russia as a key source of oil and arms but is unsettled by Putin’s growing dependence on China, India’s chief geopolitical rival. Countries such as Vietnam and the Central Asian nations have reason to be cautious about aligning with a weak and unpredictable Russia, a domineering China, or both. Improving ties with those countries would help weaken the geopolitical positions of both Russia and China.

No one should expect such moves to disrupt Xi and Putin’s de facto alliance. But with commitment, patience and unity of purpose, the U.S. and its allies can limit what China and Russia can do to threaten global stability.

Why do we care about a monarchy?

Many across the United States will have spent this week watching coverage of the British Monarchy. Millions of Americans from all walks of life will read, watch and listen to coverage of the Queen’s funeral.

Michael Hicks

This is quite a stunning turn of events, after all we endured considerable discomfort to rid ourselves of that crown. There are two important lessons in her life and position that merit considering.

The British Monarchy does not enjoy a lengthy period of support here. My ancestors arrived on this continent as refugees from the restoration of King Charles II, having recently fought against the Crown. Their disdain for the monarchy surely led their grandsons to fight throughout our Revolution. This is a common history that belongs to millions of Americans.

The foundational document of our Republic was hate mail to King George III. It is splendid irony that the most important sentence in the English language comes from our Declaration of Independence. It begins “We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal ...” I need not finish it. The Declaration rejects not merely the king, but the idea of a kingdom itself.

Our anti-monarchical sentiments run deep. Captured British cannons remain on display at West Point, and the “Shot Heard ‘Round the World” that launched our Revolution still echoes across the globe, most recently in protests of China. So, how could it be that we Americans, possessors of our own rich inheritance of freedom, would offer such regard and care for that monarchy?

The first reason, and one that is pregnant with lessons, is that institutions change. A monarchy that began as an enforcer of brutal power, later evolved. By the time young Elizabeth made her first public speeches at 14, the monarchy served a unique role that supported and expanded liberal democracy. It is not a perfect institution, nor is Britain a perfect democracy. But, sometime in the 20th century, the role of the monarchy shifted wholly to that of public duties in support of a modern democracy.

It was probably her father, who crafted the role into what it is today. King George VI entered Naval Service at 17, and distinguished himself in combat. His ascent to the throne came through the failure of his brother to complete his duties. George VI kept his family in London as it was brutally bombed, and sent his teenage daughter into military service. The future Queen Elizabeth II drove and repaired trucks. Service to the nation, not monarchical rule or elegant celebrity, became the job of a queen.

The 70-year reign of Queen Elizabeth saw the British Empire release some 43 nations from colonial control. In so doing, most elected to remain part of a loose commonwealth of friendship. Her role was to graciously watch her nation’s flag lowered for many ceremonial exchanges. This open support of liberty and freedom was critical at home and abroad. It is worth noting that representatives from nearly all these former colonies will attend her funeral.

The modern monarchy of George VI and Elizabeth II saw their democratic nation help defeat the three great scourges of modernity – fascism, communism and imperialism. Ironically, Britain’s dispensation of its own imperial holdings made it a great nation, where before only an imperial one once stood. The Monarchy helped its citizens understand that they could make this transition successfully and with grace. That is what strong, stable, adaptable institutions do – help us navigate change while ensuring continuity.

The lesson for Americans is then about the strength of our institutions – are they changing for good or ill? We must ask ourselves whether we have a Congress, Judicial Courts and a Presidency that can sustain us through dark and troubled times. Do we have governorships and state legislatures with the mettle to see us through lasting challenges? I don’t ask if we have the correct people in these offices; we often do not. I ask whether we have the right rules, norms and focus on procedure that defend our liberty.

On a more grassroots level, do we trust those who run our schools and police our streets? Do we trust the generals and admirals who defend our shores, or those people in uniform who serve? Do we trust the professors, the public health officials, the priests, ministers and rabbis, the CEOs and CFOs, the trial attorneys, nurses and physicians?

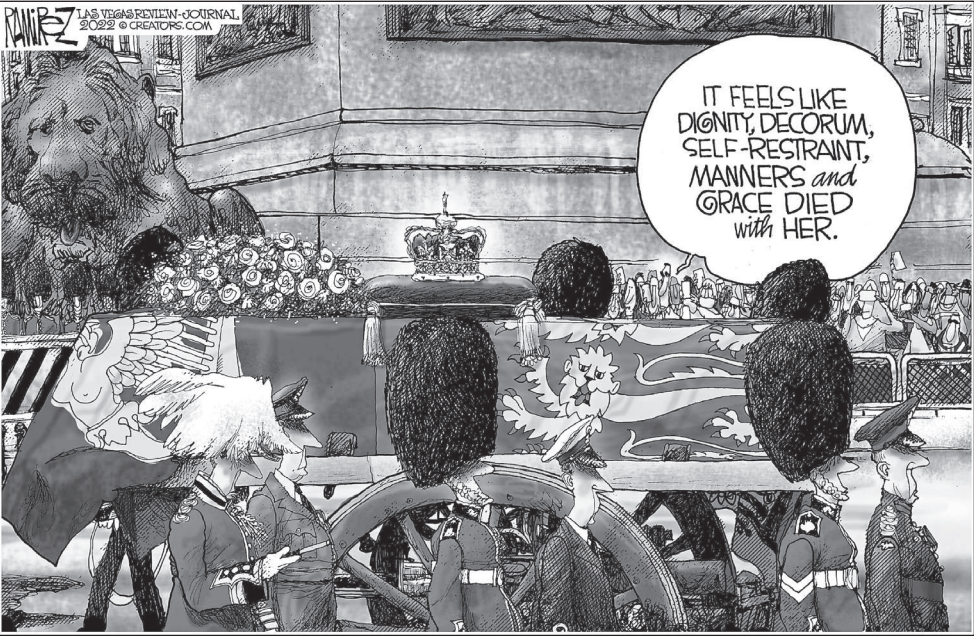

All these occupations have institutions that sustain their work. We must ask ourselves if these institutions are growing and strengthening or withering away. Do these organizations discipline the conduct of their members, do they eject miscreants and herald the heroes among them? More importantly, we might ask what we individually do to strengthen these institutions.

This is not a partisan concern. I cringe when I hear a president claim that he “has a pen and a phone” to avoid the Congress, or shatters Constitutional limits on student debt relief. So too do I worry when a president skips past Congress on war powers, or bends intent of Congress to impose tariffs. These acts weaken institutions even when undertaken by good people with whom I agree. The institutions matter; for as we have lately learned, elected office sometimes attracts the very worst of people, devoid of character, lawless, and possessing no moral compass or ethical constraint. And, that leads to our second lesson about Queen Elizabeth II.

Much will be written about her strength of character, so I will tough lightly upon it. Queen Elizabeth II was the richest woman in the world, but led what must have been a near-slavish life of public service. She did this for more than seven decades, likely performing some 30,000 public events, averaging more than one per day since she was a girl. A similar workload killed her father in his 50s. Yet, she performed this job honestly, diligently and without complaint or personal scandal. It was her duty, and she did it. That is character.

For citizens of a monarch-free Republic, that might be our most acute lesson to be drawn from her life. We cannot always find the best among us to run for office, and even those will be mere humans. Surely we can elect those who will discharge their oath of office, tell the plain truth, and when necessary suffer personal discomfort to complete their duties. We need not expect them to be perfect parents, decorated soldiers or flawless spouses. But character matters, now more than ever, and that is why we pay respects to the burial processions of someone else’s queen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

‘Those who can make you believe absurdities can make you commit atrocities’

There are a lot of reasons why things are as bad as they are in America. One that keeps coming back to me is the concept of evil. Evil is not spoken of much anymore. That’s because there is a new sheriff in town, a new philosophy about life: “It’s all good.” I say evil either exists (it’s not all good), or it’s all good. Both philosophies can’t be true.

Sure, liberals will call evil for citizens refusing to watch out for others in the middle of a deadly pandemic. Conservatives will call evil for citizens supporting abortion rights. Public policy debate and law-making will decide how evil each of those practices are (how steep the penalties might be).

But, how do we explain a doctor poisoning IV bags for use in a hospital, or a county government official murdering a reporter whose reporting he did not like, or active shooters in elementary schools? I call that pure evil, evil on another level.

We no longer consult, or, at least, interpret correctly, our ancient books of historical wisdom, like the Bible. The Bible is pretty clear. From the beginning, civilization has had to deal with periods where “The wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.” (Genesis 6:5, KJV) America is not there, but that’s the direction we seem to be heading.

However, I am worried that what will finally get us there is not random acts of pure evil but the more subtle acts of evil in high places: political evil, financial evil and even theological evil. There are deeply evil persons in high places in every institution in America. When those kinds of folks convert a few others to their views, then pure evil can get a full head of steam. Voltaire wrote, “Those who can make you believe absurdities can make you commit atrocities.”

The Bible talks about these folks. “Their feet run to evil.” “They proceed from evil to evil.” “They call evil good and good evil.”

Jesus’ prayer needs an answer today: “Deliver us from evil.” I believe it is ordinary folks who need to get themselves educated and provide the answer by getting involved as good citizens, not evil ones.

Increased funding for cultivated-meat research is needed

I was overjoyed to learn President Joe Biden’s National Biotechnology and Biomufacturing Initiative will include funding for cultivated-meat research. For those who don’t know, cultivated meat is grown from animal cells, without slaughter. Among other things, it’s better for the environment, public health, and animal welfare than slaughtered meat.

“We’re also looking to improve food security and drive agricultural innovation, including through new technologies that protect crops from disease, enhance seeds and fertilizers and foods made with cultured animal cells,” a senior administration official said in a press briefing announcing the initiative.

Increased funding for cultivated-meat research is needed to reduce the production costs of this new protein, so it can better compete with slaughtered meat. Leaders across the political spectrum should support this effort to reduce our greenhouse-gas emissions, pandemic risk, and the suffering we inflict on animals in the food system.

GRETCHEN'S TABLE

Pappardelle is tossed with a spicy poblano cream sauce for a taste of Mexico-meet-Italy pasta dish.

Creamy poblano pepper pasta

By GRETCHEN MCKAY
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (TNS)

Except for some cherry tomatoes and a few zucchini, my garden was a bust this summer. I blame the deer who consider my backyard their personal cafeteria, and a fat groundhog who lives under my garden shed. But I did manage to harvest a handful of bright and shiny poblanos, a mild chile pepper with an earthy flavor.

Poblanos are most often used in Mexican and Tex-Mex cooking – they’re terrific stuffed – but because their heat is relatively mild, they also make a fine addition to chili and soup. They’re also wonderful roasted and blended into a cream sauce.

This recipe combines such a sauce with pappardelle, a flat, broad pasta, for an Italian-meets-Mexican fusion dish. If you want to boost the summer veggie quotient, add a cup of roasted corn kernels.

Creamy Roasted Poblano Pasta

Serves 4

Ingredients:
5 small poblano peppers
2 medium chicken breasts (about 8 ounces), pounded thin
Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 teaspoon ground cumin, or more to taste

8 ounces pappardelle pasta
1 large handful cilantro (about 1/2 cup packed)
1/2 cup chicken stock
1 cup heavy cream, divided
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 large garlic clove, minced
Pinch or two crushed red pepper flakes
1/4 cup crumbled cotija or queso fresco, for garnish
Minced cilantro, for garnish

Directions:
Char poblano peppers on all sides over a gas flame until skin is blistered evenly all around.

(If you don’t have a gas stove, char them under the broiler.) Once all of the peppers are roasted, place in resealable plastic bag and let them sit for 5 minutes. This helps loosen the skin to make them easier to peel.

When they’re cool to touch, rub skin off with the blade of a knife or a paper towel. Remove stem and seeds.

Season chicken breasts on both sides with salt, a little black pepper and 1 teaspoon ground cumin. Set aside.

While the peppers are sweating, bring large pot of salted water to a rolling boil. Cook pasta until just shy of al dente, about 10 minutes. Drain, reserving about 1/2 to 1 cup of the starchy pasta water. Set aside.

While pasta is cooking, add 3 peppers, cilantro, chicken stock and 1/2 cup heavy cream to a blender or food processor. Process until smooth. Slice 2 remaining peppers into thin strips.

Heat a medium skillet to a medium heat. Add olive oil, and when it sizzles, add seasoned chicken. Cook 3-4 minutes per side, or until just cooked through.

Once pasta is drained, add poblano cream sauce to the pot, along with remaining heavy cream, minced garlic, 1/2 teaspoon salt and red pepper flakes. Taste and add more salt or cumin, if desired. Bring to a boil and reduce to a simmer until slightly thickened, about 3-4 minutes.

Add cooked pasta and sliced peppers, and cook until pasta has absorbed sauce.

Slice chicken into strips and add to pan. Stir to combine and give one final taste to see if you need more salt and/or pepper. Garnish with crumbled cotija and chopped cilantro, and serve.

QUICK FIX

Paprika adds smoky flavor to these veggie enchiladas

By LINDA GASSENHEIMER
Tribune News Service (TNS)

I wanted to make this enchilada dinner in a hurry without having to wait for my oven to preheat or to cook the filling ingredients. The answer was my microwave. It cooked the filling ingredients, then warmed the tortillas and, finally, cooked the entire enchilada dish. Another plus: No pots to wash. When the meal was over, all the dishes went into the dishwasher.

Smoked paprika gives the enchiladas a smoky flavor. In case you don’t have a microwave, I’ve given oven cooking information.

Smoky Vegetarian Enchiladas

Yield 2 servings

Ingredients:
1 cup diced onion
1 cup diced green bell pepper
2 crushed garlic cloves
1 cup canned reduced-sodium black beans, washed and drained
2 teaspoons ground cumin
2 teaspoons smoked paprika
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 1/2-cups pasta sauce, divided use
1 cup low-fat shredded Monterey Jack cheese, divided use
1 cup fresh arugula leaves
4 8-inch light whole wheat flour tortillas

Directions:
Add onion, green bell pepper and garlic to a microwave-safe bowl. Microwave on high 5 minutes. Remove and add black beans, ground cumin, smoked paprika and salt and pepper to taste to the bowl. Mix in 1/2 cup pasta sauce and 1/2 cup cheese.

I wanted to make this enchilada dinner in a hurry without having to wait for my oven to preheat or to cook the filling ingredients. The answer was my microwave. ... Another plus: No pots to wash. When the meal was over, all the dishes went into the dishwasher.

Wrap tortillas in a damp paper towel and microwave on high 30 seconds to soften them. Place them on a countertop and divide the vegetable mixture into 4 parts. Add the mixture to the center of each tortilla. Top each mixture with 1/4 cup arugula leaves. Roll the tortillas up and place in a microwave-safe dish, seam side down. Spoon the remaining 1 cup sauce over the tortillas. Sprinkle the remaining cheese over the sauce. Place the dish in the microwave for 3 minutes. The cheese will be melted, and the tortillas warmed through. Microwave another minute if needed. Serve 2 enchiladas per person.

Stovetop and oven method
Saute onion and green bell pepper in a nonstick skillet over medium-high heat 5 minutes or until they are softened and onions are golden. Complete assembling the recipe and place in a 350-degree preheated oven for 15 minutes.

Inflation a good reason to keep adult child on health plan

The conventional advice for parents is to sever the financial relationship with their young adult children as soon as they can.

We’re told to push them out to fend for themselves financially or risk raising irresponsible adults – slothfully living in their childhood bedroom or the basement – incapable of managing their money.

But that advice is outdated amid the reality of an economy still struggling from the fallout of the pandemic. Helping adult children doesn’t have to hinder their path to independence.

Our kids now face monthly rent payments that can be more than 50 percent of their take-home pay. Inflation is causing food prices to surge. Energy costs are up. If your offspring need to purchase a new or used car, they face exorbitant prices.

I’ve long advocated that parents encourage young adults to live at home as long as possible, especially if they need to pay off massive student loan debt. Even if they don’t have debt, a few years of being rent-free can help them tremendously when they finally launch. So all three of my 20-something kids, having explored the cost of renting in the Washington D.C. area, are happily living at home.

It’s already common and acceptable for young adults to stay on the family cellphone plan. Here’s another way to help your young adult children that can have lasting impact: Keep them on your health insurance plan. If you can afford to continue carrying your child on your policy even after they get their first full-time job, it will give them several years of savings that could be used to pay down debt or boost retirement contributions.

With the passage of the Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare, young adults can stay on a parent’s plan until they turn 26. But you may not realize that they can stay on the plan even if they work for a company that provides health coverage.

The ACA requires plans that offer dependent child coverage to make the coverage available until a child is 26. The coverage is mandated even if they are married or have children. Generally, they can stay on the plan even if they aren’t living at home. They also don’t have to be claimed as a tax dependent to keep the coverage.

Sit down with your child and review the cost of getting their own coverage through their employer, because the financial case to continue carrying them until 26 is

“While many employers pay a significant portion of health insurance premiums, some workers face relatively high contributions to enroll in coverage. People with employer coverage often face a deductible, which may require the enrollee to spend thousands of dollars before the plan covers most services.”

PETERSON CENTER ON HEALTHCARE AND KFF
Health System Tracker report compelling if you can afford it.

Even when employees have coverage, the combined cost of premiums, deductibles and other out-of-pocket expenses can be considerable.

Annual premiums for employer-sponsored family health insurance were $22,221 for families and $7,739 for single coverage last year, according to the 2021 Employer Health Benefits Survey by the Kaiser Family Foundation.

Most covered workers contribute toward the cost of their coverage. On average, workers contribute 17 percent of the premium for single coverage and 28 percent for family coverage. The average annual amount contributed by covered workers was $1,299 for single coverage and $5,969 for family coverage.

The financial burden of deductibles has been increasing steadily. Last year, 85 percent of covered workers had a deductible in their plan, up from 74 percent a decade earlier, the KFF report said.

The smaller the company, the bigger the deductible. Workers at firms with fewer than 200 employees on average face deductibles that are 70 percent higher than those at firms with at least 200 employees ($2,379 vs. $1,397), KFF said.

“While many employers pay a significant portion of health insurance premiums, some workers face relatively high contributions to enroll in coverage,” according to a separate Health System Tracker report by the Peterson Center on Healthcare and KFF. “People with employer coverage often face a deductible, which may require the enrollee to spend thousands of dollars before the plan covers most services.”

Workers in lower-income families with employer coverage spend a greater share of their income on health costs than those with higher incomes, the report found.

The key word in my argument is affordability. It might not be cheaper to stay on a parent’s plan. For us, the cost wouldn’t have changed since, as a couple, we still need a family plan.

This may not be doable if you’ve been looking forward to getting rid of dependent care coverage because you need to save money. It may also be the case that your child has moved to an area where it doesn’t make sense for them to stay on your plan if they have to see medical professionals outside your coverage network.

If you’re struggling, your child could share the expenses, helping with deductibles or co-pays. It doesn’t have to be an all-or-nothing agreement.

Soon enough, they will age out and be on their own. But having gap years between you carrying them and their paying all of their health-care costs can make the difference in them amassing a significant amount of money in an emergency fund and retirement account.

At the start of an adult child’s full-time employment, allowing them to stay on your health plan gives them room to catch their financial breath.

We founded American Health Network, part of Optum on the belief that health care is a collaborative effort. It needs to be proactive, not just reactive, meaning we need to help patients stay healthy and avoid sickness in the first place.

What this means for our patients

- Your better health is our top priority: We’re outcomes-driven, meaning our goal is always keeping you healthy and well to avoid sickness, disease and infection.
- Convenient and affordable: We’re committed to providing our patients with every possible resource for high-quality care at a low cost.
- Neighborhood care, powered by Optum: American Health Network is a part of the global health network of Optum.

Get in touch!

We’re now accepting new patients and would be honored to help you achieve your healthiest life! To find a primary care provider or schedule a video visit, call our office at 260-563-2126.

The logo for St. Martin Community Center, Inc. features two stylized hands, palms up, holding a circular emblem. Inside the circle, the letters 'SM' are prominently displayed in the center. The text 'St. Martin Community Center, Inc.' is written in a circular path around the 'SM'.

Executive Director, St. Martin de Porres Center

St. Martin de Porres Center is a faith-based 501(c)(3) nonprofit charity serving Marion, Indiana. The Executive Director supervises the overall daily processes of running a nonprofit, faith-based organization in a community with high rates of poverty, addiction, homelessness and food insecurity.

Duties of the Executive Director may include the following:

- Managing the daily function of the center which includes Kay's Kitchen, food pantry, thrift store and receiving donations of all kinds.
- Working closely with the St. Martin Board of Directors
- Managing both paid staff and volunteers
- Working closely with the community in a leadership role, always representing the needs of the less fortunate
- Overseeing the food delivery system for the kitchen as well as the giveaway items donated by the community
- Purchasing food and attending meetings to represent St. Martin with agencies such as the Second Harvest Food Bank, United Way and other organization that may donate items for the good of the needy
- Monitoring and depositing all funds that are received for the agency as well as following a set budget and providing accounting firm with monthly data to compile the monthly financial statement
- Monitoring all spending and keeping the organization running on budget
- Setting monthly meetings with the board of directors
- Completing all needed human resource needs, including problem solving and conflict resolution
- Overseeing the entire nonprofit organization

The Executive Director will complete training to become a certified food handler and be licensed as such, and will complete all needed training to follow TEFAP (Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program). The Executive Director will also attend all meetings with the Second Harvest Food Bank and ensure we are meeting all compliance requirements. The position requires assisting with all health department inspections for the center's food delivery process.

Executive Director Requirements:

- We are a faith-based organization and we are looking for someone with strong convictions.
- A degree in social work, addiction services or pastoral education is preferred, but not required.
- Four years of management experience required
- Ability to multi-task, work independently and take initiative is a must.
- Must be organized and able to run a fair, firm and consistent operation.

Salary based on experience. Send resume and cover letter to stmartincenter@hotmail.com. Please include salary requirements. EEO

Minor home repair leads to major hot mess

DEAR AMY: I'm a mid-dle-aged man.

My sister who lives out of state and stays in touch with hometown friends connected with one of her friends could do the flooring job together (I was mildly interested in her). I thought that maybe I crept her out, because I never heard from her again.

Amy Dickinson
Ask Amy

Fast-forward two years. I connected with a woman on a dating app who is friends with both my sister and Susan.

The new woman, "Jill," told me on our first date that she and Susan are lifelong friends and that Susan had told her that she is in love with me from our first meeting, two years ago.

All without me ever knowing!

Jill said that we couldn't be together because it would be a betrayal to Susan.

Jill and I both really hit it off and agree that our chemistry is amazing. We discussed at length the difficulty of the situation.

Jill told me that she is going to see other people. I'm a bit disappointed and confused.

Should I contact Susan? — Stuck

DEAR STUCK: "Jill's" interpretation of "girl code" seems to be that if a friend confesses to a case of unexpressed and unrequited love, then Jill must stay away, regardless of her own feelings, impulses, or instincts.

Jill might have misreported or exaggerated her friend "Susan's" feelings for you, but I am going to venture a take on this, that if Jill really wanted to have a second date with you, she would find a way to justify it — especially if the chemistry between you is "amazing."

You could certainly contact Susan to follow up on her flooring — or other — needs, but you should ask yourself if you want to invite involvement with someone who is so passive and hard to read.

At the risk of preventing you from connecting with your next great love — my instincts are that neither of these women is a match for you.

But in this regard, the most important thing to consider is what your own instincts tell you.

DEAR AMY: My husband goes to dinner a couple of times a month with the guys, including "Theo," a man he has known since elementary school.

Theo's wife "Teri" hosted a birthday party for Theo, which is where my husband and I met her. She asked if we would like to go out socially.

We got together a couple of times and it wasn't that enjoyable.

Teri took complete command — from ordering the food for the group to the topics we discussed.

It's not that we dislike them, but we just have no interest in going out socially with them!

I have given every social clue there is, not answering calls, not returning texts, and breaking plans after she has worn me down to make them in the first place!

My question is, how do I tell someone I'm not interested in being friends without hurting their feelings? — Want Out

DEAR WANT OUT: "Teri" obviously doesn't read cues the way most people do, and so you'll have to be honest (but polite) with her. Due to her domineering personality, she might need to have the dynamic and your intentions spelled out.

You could say, "Obviously, our husbands are great friends, but we don't seem to have great chemistry when we get together as couples. I'm going to back away and let the men continue their special friendship without me."

She may respond to this statement by doubling down on the social pressure, and if so, you'll have to say, "Thank you, but I just don't want to get together."

DEAR AMY: The question by "Had Enough" really resonated with me. My daughter also experienced a painful rejection and bullying from her friend group.

Her mental health suffered. She sought counseling and is successfully getting on with her life, but it changed her.

We were friends with parents of some of the girls involved. I gently brought it up, and got a very unsatisfying answer.

I realized I don't want to be associated with those people anymore and have quietly let the friendship go. I am cordial when I see them, but we don't socialize with them.

I hope Had Enough can move on, too. — Moving On

DEAR MOVING ON: The ability to let go and move on is essential self-care.

HOROSCOPE

SATURDAY, SEPT. 24, 2022

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Everyone wants to hang out with a winner. Look the part to win someone's confidence. Your friends already believe you will deliver what you promise. This is a good day for social outings and shopping trips.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your phone might start ringing and VMs start piling up. Surprise invitations may give you a chance to enjoy exciting activities or trigger a new hobby or interest. Loved ones are likely to hang on your every word.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Inquiring minds want more information and are willing to dig deep. Loved ones have an interest in your family background and your opinions so be ready to answer questions. Finances could begin to look more secure.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Remain optimistic and your faith can be rewarded. Even when you aren't in the mood for a social outing, you may have a romantic partner who is anxious to keep you company. Team up with others for the best results.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) The greatest satisfaction may come from the rewards you earn through your own efforts. You might take pride in your family connections but try not to display a sense of entitlement. Focus on romance and affection.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You can stand out in a crowd. People like to spend time with successful people, so it is to your advantage to look your best. This can be a good day to make promises or tie up funds in a binding financial arrangement.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Forge forward with an attitude that reflects forgiving and forgetting. A partner or loved one is willing to pardon your past mistakes or misunderstandings. This could be a good time to repay a debt or settle a bill.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Get out there, be proud of yourself, toot your own horn and don't let a social outing seem like a spectator sport. Join in with group activities and make new friends by sharing your thoughts and deeds.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You are a friend indeed if you often lend a helping hand. Unplug and engage in the world around you. You may decide to buy something that excites your passions. Trust that you can make sound decisions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Someone might be attracted to an air of mystery and intense passion for success. You may think you are just being yourself, but other people could find you tantalizing. Enjoy romance and social activities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) A trusted adviser can point you in the right direction. Don't think you cannot enjoy yourself just because of a lack of funds or a tight schedule. Find creative ways to have fun and meet new people this weekend.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) If you've briefly lost your sense of purpose, a friend or partner may help you find it. A loved one might trigger your enthusiasm or a friend might introduce you to a new set of acquaintances who spark new interests.

A STYLE THAT LASTS

Styles are always changing. Though we may look different on the outside, there are old truths and lasting principles that we still believe in. Found in the Bible and taught through the ages, God's ways guide us through life and give us hope. Attend His house of worship that "...you may tell of them to the next generation. For this God is our God for ever and ever; he will be our guide even to the end." (Psalm 48:13-14)
